Linguist Comes to Campus

John Rassias visited campus on February 22 to give a seminar to language teachers and the public. Rassias developed his language teaching techniques for the Peace Corps in 1964. Rassias stated that his total immersion techniques were initiated because the Peace Corps volunteers were being taught diplomacy and politics instead of language and communication, skills that would allow them to deal with the people they were there to educate. The Rassias Method, or the Dartmouth Intensive Language Learning Model was developed in 1965 at Dartmouth, and was refined under a grant from the EXXON corporation in 1968.
