COUNTY COURT RECORDS

The Cotton Belt has all the old County Court cases, I think mainly criminal. These were cases that were more serious than justice of the peace court, but less serious crimes than those handled by district court.

COUNTY RECORDS (GENERAL)

- During the 1970's North Texas State University participated in the Texas County Records Inventory Project in which each counties records were located, itemized, and described, and an inventory published. Unfortunately, Smith County did not participate. Since most counties collected similar information, researchers may want to examine the Inventory of County Records, Harrison County Courthouse, for a detailed listing of the various types of county records held by an East Texas county of similar age. The University of Texas at Tyler Library has a copy of the Harrison County inventory at call number TX DOC L1900.7 In8harr.

Instigated in 1956 when the Texas Attorney General sought to investigate the files of the NAACP branches in Houston and Dallas, the lawsuit in the 7th District Court of Texas in Smith County resulted in a permanent injunction, which prohibited the NAACP from involvement in political and litigious activities, restricting the organization to charitable and educational functions. Held by the University of Texas at Austin.
